CEHD Happenings

As we near the end of July, the staff and faculty in the College are preparing for the beginning of Fall Semester. As always, we have had a busy Summer Session – almost 800 students have been enrolled this Summer. In addition, many faculty members have been doing advanced training to prepare their courses for Fall Semester.

Speaking of Fall Semester, the College of Education & Human Development is very proud to be offering a full complement of courses, both face-to-face and online during the Fall semester. With careful attention to safety for students, faculty and staff, faculty are preparing to teach face-to-face courses with modified schedules to accommodate physical distancing and safety precautions. We are designing thoughtful on-campus learning experiences for both small and large classes and are ready to help students manage the COVID-resistant strategies that UND has put into place.

Other faculty have been working with instructional designers to convert their courses to successful, engaging, and innovative online formats. We will be able to offer students a meaningful on-campus learning experience, as well as support students who choose to study in a fully online environment.

In addition to still being available as fully on-campus programs, the following undergraduate degrees will also be going fully online for the first time this year:

Elementary Education Kinesiology Rehabilitation & Human Services

We know Fall 2020 will bring many changes to all members of our campus community, and we are ready to meet those changes with optimism and innovative ideas. Whether you are on-campus, online, or a little of each, we've got you covered...
